The Express has now given the public a fair chance to measure the influence of that journal. It has devoted its editorial columns during a whole week to Chief McCarthy, demanding that he be decapitated forthewith. The proprietors of that sheet could scarcely wait for the regular day to arrive for the Council to meet. It has urged, plead, begged and demanded by turns that all fair and honorable dealing be ignored, that the sense of public justice be violated, and that the Chief be dismissed at once. The Council meets and declines to either remove or suspend the Chief. So much for the influence of the Express. Deplorable Congressman Henley. They say that is the generation that absorbed in the "Greenebaum is not a representative Jew and should not, therefore, be appointed." To this Greenebaum replies, with as much spirit as wit, that he did that the did that the did that the did that the did the not file his application as a Jew, but as an American critizen. Greenebaum is the man who successfully played the insanity dodge in office-seeking. His friends gave it out that Greenebaum would go crazy unless he got an appointment. These tactics won, and Greenebaum won an office, and at the same tims won the everlasting gratitude of the office-seeking fraternity.

The same tims won the everlasting gratitude of the office-seeking fraternity.

My Dear General: I have read with much pain the account which you sent me of the alarming state of Grant's health. I had seen the first reports contradicted that day in which the throb of love reand hoped that they were unfounded; and I shall still hope that the danger is not as great as the account supposes. If you great as the account supposes. If you deem the occasion proper, I will thank you to convey to Mrs. Grant and to him the expression of my sincere sympathy.

Very sincerely yours. D. C. Buell.
